Editorial

Nickel Canadian coins may soon disappear. With the spot value of nickel now over $13.00 a pound the Canadian government announced it will soon be melting nickel coinage minted before 2001. The coin most targeted will be the 5 cent coin which has the most favorable metal value-face value ratio. Based on current spot prices the Canadian 5c has about 3 times face value in scrap metal. This makes melting the coins a profitable option. The only problem is according to Canadian law only the mint can melt coins for scrap. Although this has not happened yet the border cities of Detroit and Buffalo may see an increase of Canadians coming over the border with coins to sell for recycling. Even our own 5 cent coins may be in jeopardy if prices rise much higher. Currently there is between 6.5 and 7.0 cents of metal in the nickel. Even with the high metal prices, the only coins in immediate risk of being melted are the circulated examples as unc. Coins are still worth much more than metal prices. The more things change. This is a fictional scenario about coin collecting but is based on fact. A young boy walks into a coin shop in 1964 and sees in a case a 1954 proof set minted the year he was born. The set has a price tag of $22.00. He doesn't have enough money to make the purchase so to earn the money he needs he gets a paper route. Saving his dimes and quarters in a few weeks he has a small bank filled with $22.00 in common silver coins. He returns to the shop to find the set has already sold. He returns to the store several times but the set is not to be had. Returning home, he puts the bank aside and over the years his interest change and he forgets about the proof set he wanted. Years pass by and in 2006 as he looks through his possessions, he finds the bank of coins he set aside years ago. He takes the coins to a local coin shop where he sells the coins for $165.00 based on current silver prices. In the case next to him is a selection of proof sets including a 1954 with a price tag of $165.00. This story is not representative of all coins and their values and the example cited is just one possible scenario. But it goes to show if you want to invest in coins you should be very careful as opposed to a pure collector to whom value is less important.

Corrections. Last month in my editorial I discussed the designs of the North and South Dakota quarters. I mistakenly reversed the states designs. The North Dakota quarter features the bison and the South Dakota quarter features Mt. Rushmore. I apologize for any confusion this may have caused.

Coin of the month

1994 Women in military silver dollar

This month's coin of the month is the 1994 Women in military service memorial dollar. This coin was issued to help defray the costs of building the Women in military memorial in Arlington National Cemetery. The bill for the memorial was signed in 1986 and the building was opened on October 18, 1997. The memorial sits on 4.2 acres and features displays, educational forums, a small library and computer access to the records and memorials of registered women veterans. There is also a small gift shop selling items related to the memorial.

The coin is one of three issued that year dealing with veterans. The other two are the Prisoner of War silver dollar and the Vietnam Veterans silver dollar. The obverse of the coin features busts of five women each representing
