Editorial

Coming soon to a wallet near you. The Bureau of Engraving and Printing recently released the new, colorful $100 bill. In addition to the color there are a few design changes to the bill. As with the $5, $10, $20 and $50 the main portrait is larger and shown without a frame. On this bill the portrait is Benjamin Franklin, noted scientist, writer and inventor. Franklin invented the Franklin stove, bi-focals and judging by his portrait, the mullet. Also added to the bill is a large inkwell and quill pen. On the inkwell is an image of a bell, perhaps a reference to the Franklin half-dollar. With these changes the BEP had to move both signatures to the left side of the bill behind Franklin's head. The reverse is also different with a smaller image of Independence Hall. To the right of the hall is an oversized 100 printed sideways for the benefit of those with poor eyesight. Overall this as an attractive continuation of the recent changes to our currency.

Will the mint strike nickels for circulation this year? As of March 31 this year the mint has not struck any 2010 dated nickels. There are still nine months in the year so anything can happen, but with the low mintages from last year the nickels this year may be a mint set only issue. On a related note the Philadelphia mint has not struck any 2010 dimes and Denver has struck only 19 million.

ANA conventions in Chicago. The American Numismatic Association announced the locations of the summer conventions through 2015. This year the convention is in Boston. The Chicago Coin Club will host the 2011 convention in Rosemont. The following year Philadelphia will be the host. After that the convention will return to Rosemont in 2013-2015. This is good news for local collectors as the ANA conventions bring the best coins from all over the world along with dozens of first class exhibits and many fine educational seminars. One of my favorite things to do at an ANA convention is purchase a numismatic passport and visit all the foreign mint booths.

1916 Standing Liberty Quarter

This month's coin of the month is the 1916 Standing Liberty quarter. In surveys of the countries best coins, the Standing Liberty quarter almost always comes in the top 3 or 4 designs. During his presidency, Teddy Roosevelt sought to improve the look of our circulating coinage. By law the design of a coin can be changed after 25 years unless otherwise instructed by congress. The Barber quarter first issued in 1892 became eligible for change in 1916. During that year several artists submitted designs and the one submitted by Hermon A. MacNeal was chosen.

The design created by MacNeal was both bold and innovative. The central figure of Liberty is shown standing wearing a loose fitting gown exposing her right breast in what today would be called a wardrobe malfunction. In her left hand is a shield and in her right an olive branch. Liberty is facing east perhaps making a statement on America's policy concerning the war in Europe. The word Liberty circles the top of the coin around her head. Across the middle is In god we trust, there are two vertical columns totaling 13 stars on each side of her legs and the date appears below her feet.

The reverse shows an eagle in full flight. Above and between the eagle's wings are the words United States of America and E pluribus unum. Behind the eagle are seven stars while six shine before him. Below the eagle is the denomination, quarter dollar.

Physically the quarter is standard size of 24.3

mm in diameter and 6.5 grams of .900 silver and .100 copper.

The 1916 issue only has a mintage of 52,000 making it one of the lowest mintages of circulation coins in the 20th century. The date on this issue was raised and wore off quickly. Even so, with no date it is possible to determine if this is a 1916 or 1917. Some diagnostics include folds of the gown, position of the head, hair detail and detail of fingers and toes.

Collecting this coin is something for only the very well off. Values for the coin from Coin World are as follows, Good-$2,750, Fine-$7,000, Extra Fine-$11,000, MS60- $15,000, MS63-$17,000 and MS65Full Head-$35,000.

Over the years many people have made Silver rounds, tokens and exact size replicas of this coin. Many can be found very inexpensively.

New $100 bill.
